INTRODUCTION

The aim of this report is to present an analysis of the enrollment in French in the Senior High Schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933 and in the Junior High Schools of Massachusetts from 1928 to 1933. The material contained in the thirty-six tables forming the appendix of the report has been obtained from the Reports on the Organization and Administration of Secondary Schools in Massachusetts. These reports have been made under the supervision of Mr. Frank P. Morse in all public senior high schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933 and in all public junior high schools of Massachusetts from 1928 to 1933. It was due to Mr. Morse's kind permission that I was allowed to gather from the state files the material necessary for a successful completion of my work.

In order to indicate the present status of French in the secondary schools of Massachusetts, it would be significant to see how the subject attained its present position in the curriculum. The first step will, therefore, be to give a brief historical sketch of the development of the study of French in the public school system in Massachusetts. After this historical presentation the reader will find a detailed introduction regarding the arrangement and content of the thirty-six summary tables forming the major part of the report. The next step is the presentation of the thirty-six summary tables, each one of which is based on original data to be found in the appendix pp. (79-189). These summary tables are intended to show the status of French in the senior high schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933 and in the junior high schools of Massachusetts from 1928

The conclusion of the report will consist of statistical data found from a detailed analysis of the thirty-six major tables. A bibliography has been included to give original sources referred to in the preparation of the historical sketch. In order to simplify the report, it was considered advisable to add an appendix, which includes the original information that was consulted at the Department of Education, State House, Boston.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE DEVELOPMENT

French in the Colonial Private Schools

It is rather remarkable to find so much interest shown in the modern languages during the Colonial period, when one considers how very small such cities as New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Charleston were, even down to the Revolutionary War. A study of the newspapers published in all these places shows that there was a constant demand for instruction in foreign languages. They were usually regarded as polite accomplishments but now and then their practical value was stressed.¹ French was the most popular language and its popularity grew when the relationship between the two countries became closer as the result of the Revolution. There were several private schools in Boston in 1792 giving instruction in English, Latin, and French.² French became a subject of interest for the American colonists as a result of the Revolution. "During the Revolution, and more particularly immediately following it, the American Colonies began to cast about for some country to occupy the place in their friendship formerly held by England: and since France, the traditional enemy of England, had proven herself so friendly, the United States were disposed to follow her and look to her for guidance in her ideals and in establishing institutions. Some of the French patriots who, like La Fayette and Quesnay de Beaurepaire, had come to help fight the English remained to insure the leadership of French ideas and ideals, and to promote friendship between France and the new nation. Many, too, began now to come for commercial or scientific purposes.³ In 1735 a Frenchman, Languet de La Riviere, was employed to teach the French language at Harvard, but he was soon impeached for disseminating dangerous ideas in religion and was dropped from the faculty. His "dangerous ideas" consisted not in atheism but in the belief in the divine inspiration of certain dreams of life. In 1780 the American Academy of Arts and Sciences was established at Boston on French models. An instructor in French was engaged to teach here, and this instruction was given until 1800, when it was suspended in favor of private, or "extramural," instruction.⁴ The movement of introducing the study of the French language spread gradually over the Colonies. The people were interested in the French language and literature and as the interest grew, instruction spread from the private schools to the public high schools, and in some cases, to the elementary schools." Indeed, the French influence in American education was once so powerful, especially in the Carolinas and Virginia, as to color not only the educational system, but the social and home life as well. However, this influence was destined to decline. In the second, but more especially in the third quarter of the nineteenth century, we find it almost entirely replaced by the German influence.⁵

French in the Early Massachusetts Academies

Since French was introduced into the early high school by way of the Academy, it is necessary to point out the position of the subject in the latter institution. It was commonly maintained in the aims of the Academy that the curriculum should provide widespread opportunities for its students as compared with the former restricted program of studies of the Latin Grammar Schools. In the constitution of the Phillips Andover Academy, which was opened in 1778, provision was made for the teaching of languages other than the English, Latin, and Greek languages at the discretion of the trustees. Before 1828 French was taught in the Leicester Academy. By 1830 there were one hundred and fifty academies in the New England states. To what extent the modern languages were studied in the early years of these new schools is not known. That French was studied at Phillips Exeter, is vouched for by a certificate granted to Lewis Cass in 1799, which included French among the subjects studied during the seven years in which he had been a student. It was probably taken, however, as an extra-curricular subject, for modern languages were not taught there regularly until the seventies of the nineteenth century.⁶

French in the Elementary Schools

"French was introduced into the elementary schools of Boston in 1895, in response to a wish of the superintendent to enrich the curriculum. Acting upon the suggestion set forth in the report of the Committee of Ten, he desired to have Latin, French and German in the course of study.

⁶ E. W. Bagster-Collins "History of Modern Language Teaching in the United States." Page 13

Three schools began instruction in French in 1895, and in the following year the number had increased to nine, with a total enrollment of six hundred and fifty-six pupils scattered among various grades.⁷ No adequate provisions seem to have been made to have a suitable staff appointed or to determine any real policy. The director of French and German resigned in September 1896, and although the numbers studying French rose in 1897 to one thousand and thirteen, distributed among eleven schools, the whole scheme was apparently dropped in that year. At least there is no further mention made in the Boston school until the modern languages were again introduced into the intermediate classes or the junior high school in 1914. In 1915 a committee worked out a syllabus for both French and German and in the following year for Italian and Spanish. At that time (1915) there were in the seventh and eighth grades, or the intermediate classes, thirty-two classes with a total number of one thousand two hundred and eighty-one pupils who were studying foreign languages in the city of Boston!"⁸ In the report of the Committee on College Entrance Requirements, appointed by the New England Modern Language Association, which was presented at its annual meeting held in May, 1909, only three schools, two of which were in Massachusetts, stated that French was taught in the grammar schools. In Worcester and Abington, Massachusetts, and Providence, R. I., French formed a part of a six year high school course. Mention is made in the report of a few other cities, such as Springfield, Winchester and Medford, Mass., where French had been previously taught, but had been given up.

Today the teaching of French below the regular high school seems to be confined to the junior high school and to private schools, especially schools for girls.

French in the Early Massachusetts High School

The steady growth of French study dates from the period of the rise of the public high school. The study of French was introduced into the program of the modern secondary school via the academy, which made this contribution to the early high school along with other practical studies.' Particularly in Massachusetts, French made its appearance early as an optional subject. The Boston High School for Girls offered French as an elective in the last two years of the course as early as 1826. In the English High School of Boston, French is mentioned in the regulations in 1836, but it was probably introduced as early as 1832.⁹ During the earlier period the study of French and German was upheld for its cultural values primarily. Latin sentiment and race influences extensively affected the study of the modern foreign languages, especially German. Finally, within the past decade or so, the commercial values of such study have received increased emphasis. An important reason for the introduction of French in the early high schools was the fact that a number of the most prominent colleges and universities in the East early in the nineteenth century were beginning to look with favor upon the study of French.

9 E. W. Bagster-Collins "History of Modern Language Teaching in the United States" Page 26

According to Charles H. Handschin, the growth of French study in the public secondary schools in the nineteenth century has been influenced by the introduction of French in a number of the prominent colleges and universities in the East.¹⁰ Until the fifties, however, this growth had been very slow; probably due to the fact that in preparation for college, French did not have a high rank until 1875, when it was included as a specific entrance requirement for a degree in any college. Therefore, the prestige of being a college study worked to the advantage of making for the strengthening of French as a secondary school subject. In 1885, the committee on entrance requirement of the Modern Foreign Language Association of America published its survey based on the reports of some sixty colleges and scientific schools in the United States. Out of these sixty institutions less than one-third had any admission requirement in French or German. Eight colleges required for A. B. candidates an amount of French ranging from one-third of a year's study to one full year. For admission to the degree of Ph. B. only three colleges required an amount of French of less than one year and two others offered a choice of two years of either French or German. One-half to two years' French was required for admission to B. S. degree in four colleges, and three required about one year for admission to the B. L. degree. Therefore, the college influence did not have such an important effect upon the growth of French as a study in the secondary schools. It is reasonable to conclude that an important factor in the increase of French study was due to the fact that more and more high schools were being established.

10 Charles H. Handschin "The Teaching of Modern Languages in the United States" Bulletin 1913 No. 3 P. 26

After the fashion the growth of French in the United States was rapid.¹¹ The United States Commissioner of Education began collecting statistics on the prevalence of French in the high schools in 1886-87, and from that year on lists of schools offering French, and gives list on the subject, appear in the annual reports of the commissioner. Even French before 1840 and 1841 was taught in very few high schools of Massachusetts, not more than five towns reporting the subject up to that date. While there are no modern language statistics available for this period, Horace Mann, Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Education, in a study made in 1842, reports but eight hundred and fifty-eight pupils studying Latin in the entire state, so that the number of modern language pupils must have been very small indeed. From 1857 to 1898, however, the study of French in the high schools of towns of Massachusetts, of four thousand inhabitants or over, was required by law and thus it naturally grew in importance.¹² It was taken as a substitute for Greek and was especially strong in high schools for girls. Even in mixed high schools, the proportion of girls to boys in the French classes was at times very striking. In the Lowell High School, for example, fifty-nine per cent of the girls took French as against three per cent of the boys during the years 1849-51. Inglis shows the popularity of French in Massachusetts in 1850 by comparing it with other subjects studied at that time.¹³

12 Alexander Inglis "Rise of the High School in Massachusetts" 27.36-37

Let us consider a few of the French statistics that are available from the Inglis report on the "Rise of the High School in Massachusetts." The following number of towns claimed to offer French from 1834 to 1841:-¹⁴

Year	No. of towns offering French
1834	0
1837	0
1838-39	5
1839-40	5
1840-41	3

Other available statistics regarding French enrollment in various high schools of Massachusetts are as follows:-¹⁵

Year	Name of School	No. of Students in French
1837	Northampton	9
1842	Haverhill	9
1846	Worcester	15
1847	Newburyport	43

The total number of students in French at about 1850 from the following six selected towns - Ware, Roxbury, Plymouth, Marblehead, Lowell and Lynn - was two hundred and two. The total number of students from the seven following towns - Springfield, Randolph, Millbury, Lynn, Haverhill, Danvers and Plymouth - in 1860 comprised two hundred and three.¹⁶

Another table is of interest as showing the situation in one school over a term of years. In the Springfield High School of Massachusetts, the percentages of the pupils taking French are:-¹⁷

Year	Percentage
1855	25.1
1856	26.5
1857	28.2
1858	7.0
1859	6.0
1860	38.2
1861	3.7
1855-61	19.5

14 Ibid pp.89-90

15 Ibid p.92

16 Ibid p.92

17 Ibid p.92

In the Lowell High School, the status of French for a period of three years was as follows:-¹⁸

Year	Male	Female	Mean Percentage for 3 Yrs.
1849	2	52	Male - 3
1850		58	Male - 59
1851	7	66

In estimating the above data, Inglis stated that it must be remembered that many towns did not report and that many towns which did report failed to give anything like exact data regarding the studies pursued.

Status of French in U. S. from 1890 to 1915

A tremendous growth in high school population has taken place within the past forty odd years in the country at large, and during this period French has attained a very important position in the school program. The following table will give an idea of the change in School and French Enrollments in the country as a whole in five-year periods from 1890 to 1915:-¹⁹

Year	French Enrollment in Public High Schools	Secondary School Enrollment
1890	11,858	202,963
1895	22,813	350,099
1900	40,395	519,252
1905	62,120	679,702
1910	73,161	739,143
1915	102,516	1,165,495

This comparison shows that French advanced slowly but steadily. In 1915, a number of pupils studying French was four and one-half times larger than the number of students in 1890. But in terms of total enrollment percentage its increase was 1.13 per cent in twenty-five years. Between 1890 and 1900 the public secondary school enrollment increased 140 per cent, the number of pupils studying French increasing 241 per cent.

¹⁸ A. Inglis "Rise of High School in Massachusetts" pp. 91-92
¹⁹ Report of the U. S. Commissioner of Education (1916) vol. II
 pp. 487-489

Between 1900 and 1910, the total enrollment increased seventy-eight per cent, the number of pupils studying French increased eighty-one per cent. Between 1910 and 1915, the total enrollment of the public secondary school increased forty-five per cent, the number of pupils studying French increased forty per cent.

In the 1930 Office of Education Bulletin of the United States Department of the Interior there is available further data regarding French enrollment and secondary school enrollment.²⁰

In 1922 it was estimated that out of a total secondary school enrollment of 2,155,460 pupils there were 333,162 of them engaged in studying French. In 1928 both French and total secondary school enrollments had increased, there being a total of 406,012 pupils studying French out of 2,896,630 pupils enrolled in the secondary schools of the country. The same bulletin gives figures showing the situation in the study of French as it existed in Massachusetts for two representative school years.²¹ For the scholastic year of 1921-1922 it was estimated that 38.5 per cent of secondary school students in 251 schools were studying French. There were 17,831 boys and 19,899 girls making a total French enrollment in the secondary schools of Massachusetts for 1921-1922 of 37,730 pupils. For the scholastic year of 1927-1928 the percentage of secondary school students studying French in 266 schools was 37.2. There were 21,510 boys and 22,686 girls, making a total French enrollment in the secondary schools of Massachusetts for 1927-1928 of 44,176 pupils.

Effect of the World War on the Study of French

The effect of the war on the study of French in the United States is striking. In 1915 it was estimated there were over three hundred thousand pupils studying German in our secondary schools. Bagster-Collins points out that during the war, instead of occupying a commanding superiority in every section of the United States, the numbers dwindled to a mere handful of pupils over one-third of which are found in the private schools, especially in the large preparatory schools of the East.²² The war, therefore, afforded French and other modern languages not under the attack of war prejudice, an opportunity to expand. The percentage of 10.54 for the year 1915 rose to 16.76 in the nine following years. Although it did not advance to the position formerly occupied by German, yet this rise of six per cent within this short period in the country as a whole represents a remarkable gain. Such a rapid decrease in German study during and after the World War is merely an indication as to what the modern foreign languages must contend with. Nowhere else can prejudice wreck such havoc in a specific public secondary school subject. There is no doubt that the study of French would decrease the same as the study of German decreased if war should ever be declared between France and the United States. The result would probably favor the study of another modern foreign language, perhaps Spanish, or might lead to a more intensive drive for the abolition of modern foreign languages on the plea of economy and lack of worth-while reasons justifying their place in a curriculum.

CONCLUSION OF HISTORICAL SKETCH

The purpose of the preceding pages was to consider the most significant data available regarding the gradual development of French primarily as a secondary school subject in the public school system of Massachusetts. This historical presentation began with the introduction of modern foreign languages in the colonial private schools. It was clearly pointed out that because of social, economic and political reasons, French became the predominant modern foreign language taught in the colonial private schools. With the coming of the academy system, modern foreign languages became a recognized feature of American secondary education. Benjamin Franklin led the new demand for more practical subjects than those of the rigid curriculum of the Latin Grammar School by introducing French and German in his academy which he founded in 1749 at Philadelphia. Mention was then made of several academies in Massachusetts offering French. The next significant factor pertained to the introduction of French in the elementary schools of Massachusetts. The conclusion based on the evidence offered was that French plays an insignificant role in the elementary school system. It is apparent that the subject is not wanted at this stage of the educational system. The junior high school should, therefore, be the ideal stage at which to begin the study of French because it represents the point of transition between the elementary school and the senior high school. It is in this educational institution that exploration and guidance of pupil capabilities are stressed by the use of prognostic tests in order to determine a pupil's fitness for secondary school subjects. With the introduction of a new type of educational institution, namely, the democratic high school, French took on a new importance. The public high school was slow in its development. Hence, the number of pupils studying French in the public high schools was for several years very small. During this time, however, French was being widely taught in the academies, that is, the competitors of the public high school. Handschin presents data to show that nine per cent of all the students in secondary schools were studying French in 1886 and that the corresponding percentage in 1905 was 11.4. The trend of college entrance requirements had an important bearing on the development of the study of French in secondary education. It was not until 1875 that any marked interest was shown in French in the colleges. It was about this time that the modern language teacher in the colleges and universities was raised from tutorial to full professional rank. When colleges began to include French as an entrance requirement, more and more secondary schools were required to introduce the subject into their curriculum. In addition to this factor the value and importance of the public high school had become fully recognized as a result of the Kalamazoo Case, which in 1874 legalized the spread of the public high school in the state of Michigan. The case became a legal precedent for other states and greatly influenced the development of the high school at public expense in spite of the fact that some of the states were slower than others to acknowledge the responsibility. The case settled definitely the right to levy taxes in support of free public secondary education, a right without which the American high school could never have been

CHAPTER I THE PROLOGUE
1763-1765
The year 1763 marked the end of the Seven Years' War, which had seen the British emerge as the dominant power in North America. The Treaty of Paris, signed in 1763, ceded all French territory east of the Mississippi River to the British. This vast acquisition doubled the size of the British Empire in North America, but it also created a new and complex set of problems for the British government. The French had been a major ally of the American colonies during the war, and their removal from the continent was a significant blow to the colonies' sense of independence. The British, on the other hand, were now faced with the task of governing a vast and diverse territory, from the Atlantic coast to the Rocky Mountains. The colonies, meanwhile, were growing increasingly restless under British rule. They had fought a war to secure their independence from France, but they now found themselves subject to the same British policies that they had fought against. The British government, in turn, was struggling to pay the enormous costs of the war and to maintain a large standing army in North America. The result was a series of tensions and conflicts that would eventually lead to the American Revolution.

brought to its present stage of development and become generally accepted as a part of the educational system of each state. The result was a tremendous increase in total school population. Hence, French profited as did other subjects from this increased enrollment. As total school enrollments increased, it was natural to expect total French enrollments to increase. This fact was pointed out effectively by the figures given for French enrollment and secondary school enrollment in the United States from 1890 to 1915. Previous to the World War it was estimated that German ranked first in total modern language enrollment with French second and Spanish in third place. After the War, however, French had assumed the position formerly occupied by German. The historical sketch ended with a consideration of data obtained from the 1930 Office of Education Bulletin of the United States Department of the Interior. It was pointed out that for the academic year 1921-1922 out of 262 secondary schools in Massachusetts 251 of them offered French to 38.5 per cent or 37,730 pupils. For the school year 1927-1928 there were 266 secondary schools offering French to 37.2 per cent or 44,176 pupils. It should, therefore, be of some significance and of some interest to consider the status of French in the senior high schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933 and in the junior high schools of Massachusetts from 1928 to 1933 in order to find out the trend in French enrollment in the secondary schools of the state. This constitutes the second and major part of the report. The figures upon which conclusions and summaries have been based were secured from the surveys conducted by the State Department of Education.

INTRODUCTION TO THE USE OF SUMMARY TABLES

The purpose of each of the following thirty-six summary tables is to point out the significant and important data that has been drawn from a careful and intensive analysis of French enrollment in the senior high schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933 and in the junior high schools of Massachusetts from 1928 to 1933.

Since secondary schools in Massachusetts are so numerous, surveys made regarding their organization and administration are grouped in the files of the Department of Education at the State House on the basis of school enrollment of 500 pupils and over, 201 to 500, 101 to 200, 51 to 100 and 1 to 50 pupils. This applies to both senior and junior high schools.

In order to get the data needed for a successful completion of the report, it was, therefore, necessary to consult 1509 secondary school surveys (1136 for the senior high schools and 373 for the junior high schools). The results of this research have been included in the Appendix of the report where the schools have been listed alphabetically according to the way they were grouped in the files of the Department of Education, State House, Boston. Each summary table included in the body of the report is, therefore, based on its respective statistical table in the Appendix. The title of each summary table indicates clearly and fully the exact nature of the information which it is to present. The conclusions and summaries of each table are presented in four columns; the first states the various French courses offered together with their respective enrollments all of which are added to give the total at the bottom of the first column; the second column points out the percentage which each French course enrollment formed of the total school enrollment and states at the bottom the percentage which the total French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment; the third column consists of the percentage which each French course formed of its own total language enrollment; the fourth column includes the percentage of schools offering various French courses. The total percentage represented at the bottom of the last column is to be differentiated from the percentages above it. The latter percentages are based on data of the particular group considered, while the former, that is, the last figure of the last column is based upon the entire number of junior or senior high schools in Massachusetts offering French for a particular academic year.

For quick reference the total school enrollment and total French enrollment secured from the individual major tables are included and placed beneath the summary table together with the percentage which the French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment. This figure should correspond with the percentage found at the bottom of the second column.

For the academic year 1932-1933 the total school enrollment in the 512 junior high schools of Massachusetts was 103,419 pupils, of whom 15.1 per cent or 15,562 studied French in 125 or 57.5 per cent of the schools. Of the total French enrollment 55.8 per cent or 2,749 pupils studied French I; 28.7 per cent or 4,498 were in French II; 10.7 per cent or 1,680 were in French III and 4.6 per cent or 725 were in Special French classes.

CONCLUSION

Thus far there has been a presentation of the thirty-six summary tables of the report based on the respective tables found in the appendix (pp⁷⁹⁻189). As part of the conclusion seven additional tables have been included for the purpose of giving a more definite idea of the status of French in the senior high schools of Massachusetts as reported in every second year from 1924 to 1933 and in the junior high schools of Massachusetts from 1928 to 1933. Each summary table that has so far been presented gave data pertaining to schools as classified in five separate groups on a basis of total school enrollments for senior and junior high schools respectively.

Yearly resumes likewise gave statistical data by which the reader was able to judge the status of French in the senior and junior high schools of Massachusetts for various academic years.

At present an attempt will be made to summarize in a more concise form the totals of these various summary and yearly tables in order to arrive at definite conclusions regarding enrollments in French and the percentage which such enrollments formed of the total school enrollments for each academic year mentioned. These final conclusions will pertain first to the senior high schools, then to the junior high schools and finally to all the secondary schools of Massachusetts according to the academic year being considered. Such data will enable the reader to see the trend in French Enrollment in secondary schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933.

Tables XXXVII to XXXIX are of great significance because they show not only the number of schools offering French with total school enrollment but also the trend in total French enrollment in every second year for the senior high schools of Massachusetts from 1924 to 1933 and for the junior high schools from 1928 to 1933 together with the percentage which the French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment.

It is necessary at this point to consider Tables XXXVII to XXXVX in more detail. Table XXXVII shows that the French enrollment in the senior high schools of Massachusetts as reported in every second year from 1924 to 1933 advanced slowly but steadily. During the academic year 1924-1925 there were 220 senior high schools in Massachusetts having a total school enrollment of 106,734 pupils, of whom 38.6 per cent or 41,222 pupils studied French in 218 or 99 per cent of the schools. For the academic year 1926-1927 there were 113,489 pupils enrolled in 224 senior high schools in Massachusetts. Of this number, 37.4 per cent or 42,483 studied French in 222 or 99 per cent of the schools. For the academic year 1928-1929 the total school enrollment in 211 senior high schools was 118,003. Of this number 36.9 per cent or 43,599 pupils studied French in 208 or 98.5 per cent of the schools. For the academic year 1930-1931 there were 250 senior high schools reporting a total school enrollment of 135,336 pupils of whom 33.5 per cent or 45,405 studied French in 244 or 97.6 per cent of the schools. For the academic year 1932-1933 the total school enrollment in 244 senior high schools of Massachusetts was 155,460 pupils, of whom 33.7 per cent or 52,394 studied French in 244 or 100 per cent of the schools.

Although there was a steady increase in the total French enrollment as reported in every second year from 1924 to 1933 for the senior high schools of Massachusetts, the percentages which the total French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment reveal a steady decrease. In the academic year 1924-1925 the percentage which the French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment was 38.6. In 1926-1927 the percentage had decreased 1.2 per cent to 37.4 per cent. In 1928-1929 it decreased only .5 per cent, making 36.9 per cent. In 1930-1931 it took a drop of 3.4 per cent and became 33.5 per cent. In 1932-1933 it remained approximately the same, there being an increase of .2 per cent to make the total percentage which the French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment 33.7. This figure represents a decrease of 4.9 per cent from the percentage of 1924-1925. These percentages reveal that while school and French enrollments increased, the percentage of the total French enrollment did not advance in proportion to the percentage of the total school enrollment. The following percentages tell the story more clearly. From the academic year 1924-1925 to that of 1932-1933 there was a 31.3 per cent increase in total school enrollment while the increase in French enrollment for the same period was only 21.4 per cent.

In considering Table ^{XXXVIII} it is evident that approximately the same conditions prevail in the junior high schools of Massachusetts. During the academic year 1928-1929 there were 168 junior high schools in Massachusetts with a total school enrollment of 76,518 pupils of whom 22.4 per cent or 17,145 studied French in 125 or 74.3 per cent of the schools. For the academic year 1930-1931 there were 209 junior high schools in Massachusetts having a total school enrollment of 91,121 pupils. Of this number 15.8 per cent or 14,439 pupils studied French in 126 or 60.2 per cent of the schools. For the academic year 1932-1933 the total school enrollment in 212 junior high schools of Massachusetts was 103,049 pupils, of whom 15.1 per cent or 15,652 studied French in 122 or 57.5 per cent of the schools. Although there was a sharp decrease in French enrollment for the academic year 1930-1931 from that of the academic year 1928-1929 there was a gradual increase in 1932-1933. In the academic year 1928-1929 the percentage which the French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment was 22.4. In 1930-1931 this percentage dropped 6.6 per cent and became 15.8 per cent. In 1932-1933 the percentage remained about the same, there being only a .7 decrease in total per cent making a percentage of 15.1. This represents a decrease of 7.3 per cent from the percentage of 1928-1929.

The above figures and percentages reveal that while total school and French enrollment in the junior high schools increased there was not a corresponding increase in the percentage which the total French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment. Again we have the same situation that existed in the senior high schools, namely that French enrollment from 1928 to 1933 did not advance in proportion to the school enrollment. There was a 25.8 per cent increase in the junior high school enrollment from the academic year 1928-1929 to that of 1932-1933. For the same period there was a decrease of 8.91 per cent in total French enrollment. This decrease can be explained by the larger French enrollment in 1928-1929 than in 1930-1931.

The title of Table XL explains its aim in full, and there is no need of restating the facts regarding the decrease in percentages which I have just mentioned above.

Table XXXIX combines the total number of junior and senior high schools in every second year from 1924 to 1933 reporting French enrollment and presents the percentages which the French enrollment formed of the total secondary school enrollment. This table gives a clear indication of the trend of French enrollment in the secondary schools of Massachusetts in every second year from 1924 to 1933. It is evident that both school and French enrollment have increased steadily but again we have the same situation as before, namely, that the percentage of total French enrollment does not increase in proportion to the percentage of the total school enrollment. In the academic year 1924-1925 the percentage which the total French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment was 38.6. This percentage decreased 1.2 per cent in the academic year 1926-1927 and became 37.4. In 1928-1929 there was a decrease of 6.2 per cent and the percentage was then 31.2. In 1930-1931 the percentage was 26.4, representing another decrease of 4.8 per cent. In 1932-1933 the figure was approximately the same, there being only .1 per cent decrease. The percentage which the total French enrollment formed of the total school enrollment in the academic year 1932-1933 was then 26.3. The following percentages show that the French enrollment did not advance in proportion to the school enrollment. A comparison between the total school enrollments for the academic years 1924-1925 and 1932-1933 reveals that there was an increase of 57.8 per cent in total secondary school enrollment. A comparison between the French enrollments for the same years reveal an increase of 39.5 per cent in total French enrollment.

Tables XLI - XLIII present data which was essential to a successful completion of the report and without which certain percentages would have been unattainable. It was considered to be of sufficient importance to be included as summary tables in the conclusion of the report.

Table XLI presents the total school enrollments arranged in three columns; the first showing the junior high school enrollment in every second year from 1928 to 1933; the second showing the senior high school enrollment in every second year from 1924 to 1933, and the third representing the total secondary school enrollment in every second year from 1924 to 1933. The totals of the first two columns make up the totals of the third column.

Table XLII includes the number of senior high schools in Massachusetts offering courses in French as reported in every second year from 1924 to 1933. The table consists of seven columns; the first and second give the name of the course and the academic year when given respectively; each of the remaining columns is classified on the basis of total school group enrollment, that is, the total number of schools reporting having 500 pupils and over, 201 to 500, 101 to 200, 51 to 100, and 1 to 50. It is, of course, evident from Table XLII that of the total number of schools reporting for each academic year the tendency is to offer a three year course in French. There is a noticeable decrease in the number of schools offering French III and those offering more advanced courses.

Table XLIII represents the number of junior high schools offering courses in French as reported in every second year from 1928 to 1933. The table is arranged similarly to that of Table XLII and what is characteristic of the preceding table is also evident in Table XLIII. In this case the tendency is for a two year French course as can be seen by the decrease in the number of schools offering French II and those offering more advanced courses.

APPEND IX

INTRODUCTION TO THE ANALYSIS OF FRENCH ENROLLMENT IN THE SENIOR HIGH SCHOOLS OF MASSACHUSETTS FROM 1924 TO 1933 AND IN THE JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS OF MASSACHUSETTS FROM 1928 TO 1933

The material presented in the following tables has been obtained from the High School Surveys conducted every two years since 1924 for the senior high schools and since 1928 for the junior high schools of the commonwealth of Massachusetts. These surveys have been authorized by the Massachusetts Department of Education and are under the supervision of Mr. Morse, state supervisor of secondary education. It was due to Mr. Morse's kind permission that I was allowed to gather from the files, containing the reports on the organization and administration of each secondary school in Massachusetts, the necessary material to form the body of my thesis.

Since Massachusetts has so many secondary schools, it was necessary to devise a system of classifying them. I have used the same system that the state department of education uses, namely, that of dividing the schools alphabetically in groups on the basis of school enrollments. This means that schools having over five hundred enrollment form one group, then comes another group having two hundred and one to five hundred pupils in the school enrollment, this being followed by another group composed of schools having one hundred and one to two hundred pupils enrolled, and finally there is a fourth group consisting of schools having an enrollment of one to one hundred pupils. Beginning in the senior high and junior high school surveys of 1930-1931, the last group was divided in order that a fifth group might be included, namely, those schools having an enrollment one to fifty pupils. The reader will find it easy to read any one of the tables presented because of their simple construction. Whatever is included in the tables always pertains to the heading at the top of each column and hence there can be no misunderstanding as to what any of the figures presented in the body of the tables mean.

Each table is properly labeled in order to denote its significance and its relationship with the tables that either follow or precede it. Beginning with the senior high school survey of 1924-1925 and ending with the combined senior and junior high school survey of 1932-1933, there is a total of thirty-six tables, each one of which has been separately classified on the basis of school enrollments.

Seven columns are used to represent the material of each table. At the top of each column there is an explanatory heading in order to point out the nature of the material which is to be presented. The first column states the location and in some cases the name of the schools, in an alphabetical order. The second column serves to show whether or not a school offers one, two, three, four, or five years of French and in some cases indicates the special French classes which are listed in the school schedules. The third column indicates whether or not the course listed in the previous column is intended for pupils in their freshman, sophomore, junior and senior years; numbers being used to represent years, as 1 stands for freshman, 2 for sophomore, 3 for junior and 4 for senior. The fourth column designates the number of periods a class meets per week. The fifth column is important because it contains the number of students enrolled in the French classes of each school. These totals are added to form the basis of the sixth column. Finally, there is the seventh column, which represents the school enrollments.
